

A long-term view to lifestyle

FATHER KNOWS BEST: Theo Marinis looks to the future.

INVESTING in personal super is a key plank of Theo Marinis's wealth strategy.

The financial strategist from Marinis Financial Group also puts his money into property and managed funds, always with a long-term view.

"Be it property or managed funds, you really need a minimum investing period of five to seven years or so before making any financial decision," Mr Marinis said.

"It's important to be mindful that you need time to sit on it before you will see the dividends. Investing in personal superannuation is the key to a strong and robust long term financial plan."

Diversity is another key.

Mr Marinis said his investments in direct property had steadily increased, as had his managed funds with an Australian shares focus.

"As a father of two young daughters, it really is all about giving my family a reasonable lifestyle now and ensuring we can sustain it, for the foreseeable future," he said.

"Perhaps its school fees, summer holidays or a holiday house – the investments I consider are about ensuring we can do all this and more if that's what we decide to do.

"Access to top quality research has ensured my investments have continued to grow."
